“THE PRESIDENCY AND THE SUPREME COURT”

A Conference Organized by the Presidential Libraries

November 11 - 12, 2007

Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library and Museum

The Archivist of the United States and the nation's twelve presidential libraries will host the “The Presidency and the Supreme Court,” a national conference being held at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library, the nation's first presidential library, in Hyde Park, New York, November 11-12, 2007.

The conference is scheduled to coincide with the 125th anniversary of Franklin Roosevelt's birth and the 70th anniversary of the Constitutional Revolution of 1937. The Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute, the Foundation for the National Archives, and the presidential libraries and their foundations have generously funded this gathering of prominent scholars, policymakers, and journalists, who will deliberate on the complex relationship between the Supreme Court and the Presidency and the impact of that interaction on American society.

The conference will be modeled on the first jointly sponsored presidential libraries conference, “Vietnam and the Presidency,” which was held at the Kennedy Library in March 2005. In a bi-partisan manner exemplifying the impartial role of the presidential libraries, the Supreme Court conference will bring together a wide range of speakers who represent the diversity of American political conviction. The conference will feature a taped video welcome by former President George H. W. Bush and a keynote address by former Associate Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Supreme Court Historical Society
The Honorable Sandra Day O'Connor

The conference opens with an overview of the Hoover and Roosevelt Courts, moderated by Columbia University Provost Alan Brinkley, editor of a recent American Historical Review article on The Constitutional Revolution of 1937. A panel moderated by Archivist of the United States Allen Weinstein will examine the political process of Supreme Court nominations and confirmations from Presidents Truman through Clinton. Throughout the second day of the conference, National Public Radio's Nina Totenberg will moderate panels of distinguished speakers who will examine the Court's influence on social issues, civil rights and presidential power in times of crisis. In all panel discussions ample time will be provided for audience participation.

“The Presidency and the Supreme Court” will be held at the Henry A. Wallace Visitor and Education Center on the grounds of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library and Home in Hyde Park, New York. The conference is open to the general public free of charge. Seating is very limited and reservations are required. To make a reservation call (845) 486-1966.

News - Archives & Education

FROM THE DIRECTOR

This issue of Rendezvous is headlined by “The Presidency and the Supreme Court,” which is a national conference being held in Hyde Park, sponsored by all twelve of the nation's presidential libraries—from Hoover through Clinton—the National Archives, and the foundations that support our presidential libraries.

The Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute is taking a leadership role in co-sponsoring this important conference, whose topic was originally suggested by Ambassador William J. vanden Heuvel when he attended the first national conference sponsored by the presidential libraries: “Vietnam and the Presidency” held at the Kennedy Library in 2006. The then-director of the Kennedy Library, Deborah Leff, spearheaded this important first step in the development of educational programs on inclusive themes that cut across a broad swath of the history of the modern American Presidency.

The fact that we are now offering the second collaboratively developed presidential libraries conference is a major step to a goal we in the presidential libraries have been working towards for several years. We owe much to our leader, Sharon Fawcett, the assistant archivist for presidential libraries, for nudging us along and for nurturing a spirit of cooperation rather than competition. This is important because it can only lead to better service and an increased understanding of the presidency among the American people, who are the constituency for all of our libraries.

The Presidential Timeline is one of many projects developed collaboratively by the presidential libraries. www.presidentialtimeline.org

Another joint presidential libraries project is the Presidential Timeline, an interactive online chronology of the presidencies in the federal system of presidential libraries that are part of the National Archives. This important project has been spearheaded by Betty Sue Flowers, director of the LBJ Library, who worked with the University of Texas to submit a successful grant application to the National Endowment for the Humanities, which provided the start-up costs. Now new private funders are contributing to this important learning tool that will provide historical context and a long-term view of presidential history accessible to students, teachers, and the general public. One day, if we are successful, the Presidential Timeline will encompass all 43 American presidents. I invite you to view it online at www.presidentialtimeline.org.

Roosevelt Library's New Deal Store Launches Online Shopping Cart

We are particularly proud that this summer one of our student interns, Sarah Malcolm, "populated" the FDR portion of the Timeline with some eighty primary source documents and photos providing context for events surrounding December 7, 1941. We are grateful to the LBJ Foundation for providing funds for this effort.

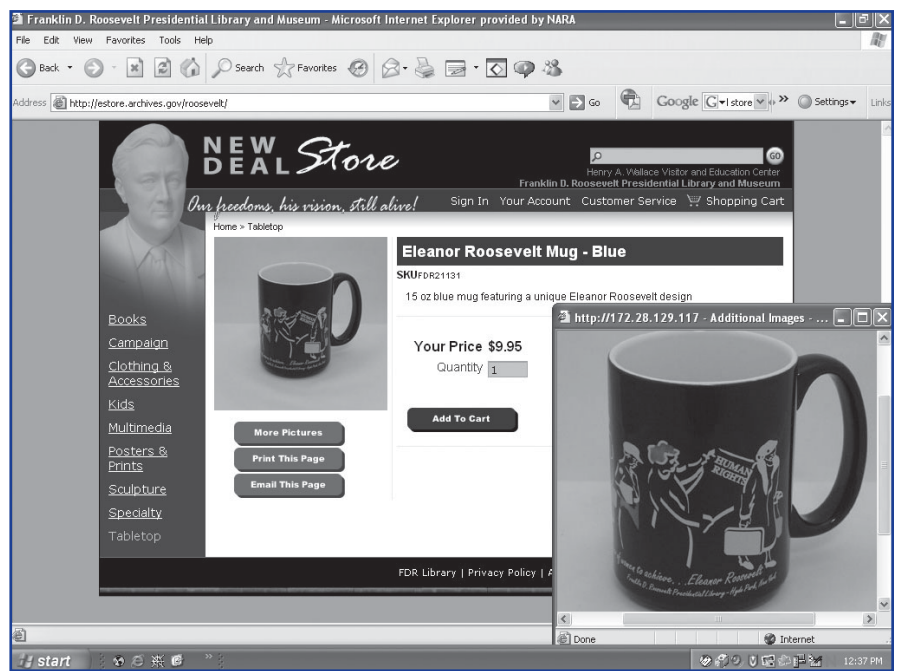

If you have been watching C-SPAN on Friday evenings this fall you will have seen another result of our new collaboration. Beginning on September 7 with the Herbert Hoover Library in West Branch, Iowa, and concluding on November 30 with the Clinton Presidential Center (FDR Library was September 14), the twelve presidential libraries are being spotlighted on live television with behind-the-scenes tours of archival stacks and museum storerooms, complete with call-in segments hosted by the Library directors, archivists, and curators. Watch us all in action on C-SPAN on Fridays from 8 to 10 PM.

The New Deal Store online is here! No need to leave the comfort of your computer screen to shop for Roosevelt-related books, gifts, and other treasures from our New Deal Store in the Henry A. Wallace Center.

Available at www.fdrlibrary.marist.edu, the online store is a one-stop shopping experience for FDR and ER admirers all over the world. Better yet, shoppers help the "cause" of supporting the work of the FDR Presidential Library and the Home of FDR National Historic Site.

Online shoppers can browse and buy using the electronic shopping cart. Check out is easy and purchases will be on their way the next business day. From the latest books on the Roosevelts and their times, to T-shirts, ties and caps, multimedia, campaign memorabilia, and museum replicas—the New Deal Store has it all. New items are added weekly so come back and browse often.

For our Rendezvous readers we have a special incentive. Just type in the word "Rendezvous" in the code box and receive a 10% discount on your entire order until December 25, 2007, so plan to do your holiday shopping here.

Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute Announces New Leadership

The Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute announced new leadership at its April 2007 Board of Directors and Governors meeting.

Richard E. French, Jr. will join Anna Eleanor Roosevelt as Co-Chair of the combined Roosevelt Institute Boards. Stepping down as Co-Chair is Ambassador William J. vanden Heuvel, who led the Institute for many years as President and Co-chair. He will continue to offer guidance and inspiration in his new role as Founder and Chairman Emeritus. Joining Mr. French and Ms. Roosevelt in leadership of the Board is Alison Overseth, who will serve as Chair of the Executive Committee. Christopher J. Breiseth has resumed his position as President and CEO following his tenure as President Emeritus, completing the leadership team.

The change comes as the Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute marks the twentieth anniversary of its founding in 1987 under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., Ambassador vanden Heuvel and the late Arthur Schlesinger, Jr. Fredrica Goodman was FER's first Executive Director; she has served on the board ever since.

Also this year, the Institute is in the process of completing a merger with the Roosevelt Institution, a student-run "think tank," which was founded in 2004. The Roosevelt Institution is a national network of campus-based organizations working to train and empower students in the policymaking process and to effect change in American politics. By bringing these enthusiastic young people into the organization, the Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute will expand its mission of furthering the political legacy of the Roosevelts and inspiring future generations to progressive action.

Last Chance to see World War II Exhibition

There are just a few weeks left to experience the special exhibition Freedom From Fear: FDR Commander in Chief. The popular exhibit closes on December 31, 2007 after an extended two-year run. It has attracted large numbers of visitors and inspired substantial media coverage, including strong reviews in The New York Times and other publications.

Freedom From Fear—on view in the William J. vanden Heuvel Special Exhibitions Gallery—offers visitors an unprecedented glimpse into President Roosevelt's wartime leadership with rich displays of top secret documents, rarely seen artifacts, and immersive audiovisual productions.

The late Arthur Schlesinger, Jr. and son Stephen Schlesinger view the Freedom from Fear exhibition with Supervisory Museum Curator Herman Eberhardt, September 23, 2005.

Next up in the vanden Heuvel Gallery is a major exhibition celebrating the 75th anniversary of the start of the New Deal. Titled 100 Days That Saved America, it will explore the dramatic, history-making "First 100 Days" of FDR's presidency. The exhibit will vividly evoke the dire economic state of the nation during the grim winter of 1932-1933 as Roosevelt prepared to take office. It will then sweep visitors up in the whirlwind of action and legislation initiated by the new President to combat the Great Depression.

In less than four months, FDR "saved" American capitalism by stabilizing the economy, providing massive relief, and perhaps most important, restoring hope to his fellow citizens. In the process, he preserved democratic government in the United States.

The speed and scope of Roosevelt's actions during these dramatic days was unprecedented. The nation-changing actions he initiated continue to shape our economic and political lives today. Seventy-five years later, new presidents still recall FDR's historic first days in office, emphasizing the agenda for their own first "100 Days."

100 Days That Saved America opens on March 4, 2008—the 75th anniversary of President Roosevelt's inauguration and the famous inaugural address in which he assured the nation that "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself." It will feature treasured and rarely-seen documents and artifacts from the Library's collections, along with historic photographs, posters, film, and audio reflecting life in America during the first months of the Roosevelt administration.

USS Roosevelt Displays

The Roosevelt Library is completing work on a collaborative project with the crew of the USS Roosevelt (DDG 80) to create exhibits aboard the ship that feature reproductions of photographs, documents and posters from the Library's collections. The Roosevelt is a guided missile destroyer named in honor of Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt.

The idea for the project originated in January, when Commander John A. Carter of the Roosevelt visited the Library and inquired if the Library could provide photographs and visual materials to educate and inspire the crew about the President and First Lady. Director Cynthia Koch enthusiastically embraced the idea.

In February, Supervisory Museum Curator Herman Eberhardt and Exhibits Specialist James Sauter visited the Roosevelt while it was docked at Norfolk, Virginia. They subsequently designed easy-to-install and eye-catching photographic panels, which the Navy will install later this fall.

We at the Roosevelt Library are delighted to be part of this new sense of shared mission among the presidential libraries—for after all—it was FDR who established what was to become the presidential libraries system. Nearing the end of his second term and contemplating his post-presidency, Roosevelt began casting about for a way to preserve in one place the millions of pages of papers from his life in public service. No one repository would take it all—from his years as New York state senator, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Governor of New York and finally the Presidency. Moreover he had his vast personal collections of ship models, naval and maritime art, gifts from heads of state and ordinary Americans, New Deal art, Hudson Valley art and artifacts—and of course, family papers and mementoes. And so he conceived the model that is followed to this day. He established a private foundation to raise the funds to build the library and when it was complete, turned it over to the National Archives, a new agency authorized in 1934 to collect and preserve the papers of our federal government. President Truman followed suit and by 1955 under President Eisenhower's leadership, the Presidential Libraries Act established the system of presidential libraries.

At the last meeting of the directors of presidential libraries—held at the Harry Truman Library in Independence, Missouri, to commemorate the 50th anniversary of that library—we adopted a mission statement. I think it is high time we share it with you, the American people:

Presidential Libraries promote understanding of the presidency and the American experience. We preserve and promote access to historical materials, support research, and create interactive programs and exhibits that educate and inspire.

News from the Archives - Wallace Letters and the "First Lady of the World"

The year 2007 has been a busy and exciting one in the Roosevelt Library Archives.

Through the assistance of the Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute and generosity of David Wallace Douglas, the Library was able to acquire a fascinating collection of letters written by Henry A. Wallace to Charles and Juanita Roos

We also were pleased to receive from John N. Lieber an extraordinary letter about Eleanor Roosevelt written by Harry Truman on March 21, 1963. Responding to a citizen's gift of a tribute book about Eleanor Roosevelt who had died the previous year, Truman handwrote a postscript that reads "I named her 'First Lady of the World' while she was still with us."

Notable acquisitions this year also include the papers and memorabilia of Frederick C. Schneider, Jr., a member of the 240th Military Police Battalion that safeguarded Hyde Park during World War II, donated by his widow Helen M. Schneider; the scrapbooks, photographs and other historical materials of Helen Roosevelt Robinson, FDR's niece, donated by Nora Stark, the granddaughter of Helen R. Robinson; the papers of Philip S. Brown, an official in the Resettlement Administration and FSA, donated by his daughter Deborah Brown; a collection of 1920s and 30s radical pamphlets and newspapers donated by SUNY New Paltz professor David Krikun; an accretion to the papers of Adolf A. Berle, Jr., donated by his daughter Beatrice Berle Meyerson; and the research materials of University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee professor Mordecai Lee who examined the creation and operations of the Office of Government Reports established during the FDR administration.

Although as of this writing the Library's fiscal year is not yet over, we already have exceeded last year's researcher numbers, which made us the busiest research room in the presidential library system. As of August 31st, the research room has hosted 1,394 researcher visits, and Library staff has responded to 2,555 requests for information—putting us in good stead for retaining our right to claim the mantle of busiest research room for another year.

The archives was particularly happy to welcome to the research room noted Roosevelt biographer James MacGregor Burns and his co-author Susan Dunn, as well as the many students, scholars and citizens who come to the Library every year to learn about the Roosevelts and the Roosevelt era.

Dear Mr. Holiber:

Thank you very much for the "Tribute to Our First Lady, Eleanor Roosevelt".

I am glad to have it and more than appreciate your thoughtfulness in sending it to me.

Sincerely yours,

Harry Truman
I named her the "First Lady of the World" while she was still with us.

during the weeks surrounding the first inaugural of Franklin Roosevelt. The Roosees were spiritual confidants of Wallace, and he shared with them in these letters some of the extraordinary events he experienced during the First Hundred Days, including designing the New Deal farm programs and watching FDR sign the bill abrogating the gold clause. A classic archival story, these letters were found in an old shed by the new owner of the Roos house in California.

From Eugene Westerberg the Library received as a loan with intent to deposit a unique "chit" handwritten by FDR on or about December 13, 1941 in which he lists four action points related to wartime joint strategic planning between the United States, China, the Soviet Union, and Great Britain. In this single document we can see the origins of the coalition that Franklin Roosevelt would later call the "Four Policeman" of the United Nations.

Roosevelt Education Programs: Spending the Summer Serving Up Tunes and Tuning Up Teachers

In New York State the school year ends in June, but you would not have known it judging from the record number of students and teachers participating in the Roosevelt Library's education programs this past summer. Nearly 700 students and more than 300 teachers took part in programs and workshops in Hyde Park and on the road in July and August.

Serving Up Tunes

Particularly noteworthy were the students in Poughkeepsie's Catherine Street Community Center's Summer Program who rounded out their studies to the tune of the "Roosevelt Rap." The "Roosevelt Rap" is a timeline in syncopated song whose lyrics tell the story of the life and work of President Franklin Roosevelt. The eighty students in the Catherine Street Center Summer Program were from grades two through five in Poughkeepsie City Schools.

Education Specialist Jeff Urbin works with students from the Catherine Street Center, August 16, 2007.

FDR Presidential Library

The six week program was a collaborative effort made possible by the Library, the National Park Service, the Catherine Street Center and retired teachers from the American Association of University Women. The students spent most of their time at the Catherine Street Center improving their math, reading and English skills, but each Thursday they boarded a bus and took the twelve minute ride from Poughkeepsie to the world of their "Dutchess County neighbors," Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt. While here they were introduced to Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt by visits to the Library and the National Park sites. They also spent time learning and rehearsing the "Roosevelt Rap." The culmination of their work was a live performance of the "Roosevelt Rap" by all eighty participants. To experience the "Roosevelt Rap" yourself, you can listen to it on the education page of our website at www.fdrlibrary.marist.edu. A DVD version can be requested from the Library's Pare Lorentz Film Center by calling (845) 486-1963. For more information about teacher workshops or other education programs call (845) 486-7761.

Tuning Up Teachers

Meanwhile the Wallace Center's classrooms, ordinarily accustomed to serving students, were filled with teachers from as far away as Alaska. Eight teacher workshops were held this summer. Two were week-long residential teacher workshops on FDR and the World Crisis, 1933-1945: Roosevelt and Hyde Park, which were sponsored by the Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute with funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Teachers attended interactive lectures by scholars Anthony Badger, J. Garry Clifford, Ryan Hegg, Alan Hendrickson, Warren Kimball, David Kennedy, Cynthia Koch, Stephen Schlesinger, John Sears and David Woolner.

Working with the Library's education staff and with documents selected from the presidential archives, teachers were trained in how to use primary source material in their classrooms and how to get students to analyze and think critically about such material. For those workshops held on site, the classroom experience was capped off with tours of the Home of Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site, the FDR Presidential Library and Museum, and the Research Room. Archive stack tours were arranged and led by the Supervisory Archivist Bob Clark. The information, resources and enthusiasm gained by their participation will be shared with their students in classrooms from coast to coast for years to come.

During July 31 to August 2, the National Park Service's Teaching the Hudson Valley professional development seminar was held in the Wallace Center for 125 teachers from the region. This year's theme was "Explore, Innovate, and Inspire." Archivist Robert Clark presented a workshop on using the Roosevelt Library's primary source documents.

Jeffrey Urbin also presented other workshops this summer: The Embodied President for the North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics; The Cahn Fellows Program Summer Leadership for Columbia University's Teacher College; 2007 Teaching American History Project Summer Institute for EASTCONN Regional Education Service Center. In August he traveled to Washington, D.C. for the Campaign 2008 Classroom Educators' Conference at the C-SPAN headquarters. Director Cynthia Koch conducted a seminar at the 2007 Penn Legacy Institute in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania on the significance of the Election of 1932.
